
This short guide is designed as a starting point for schools wanting to review their RSE provision for disabled pupils and those with SEN to ensure accessibility and quality. It includes answers to frequently asked questions, practical top tips and signposting to further resources.

All children are entitled to Relationships and Sex Education. This entitlement is enshrined in the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child which establishes that all young people have the same right to enjoy their sexuality within the highest attainable standard of health, free of coercion and violence, and to access quality sexuality education and sexual health services.

Before we start...

In practice there is a significant overlap between disabled pupils and pupils with special educational needs (SEN) and throughout this guide we refer to ‘pupils with SEND.’ However, it is important to bear in mind the diversity of pupils and there should be no assumption even that pupils with a particular type of disability or need should be taught in the same way as each other. Teaching of any subject should be tailored to remove barriers and meet the needs of the individual pupils being taught; for disabled pupils and pupils with SEN, it is therefore all the more important that reasonable adjustments to teaching are informed by parents and pupils themselves.

For pupils with more significant needs, their particular RSE needs may helpfully be assessed as part of an Education Health Care (EHC) needs assessment, with provision to meet those needs set out in their EHC plan.

For pupils who already have an EHC plan, specific consideration of their RSE needs may helpfully be provided at annual review.
Q: What should RSE cover?

Relationships and sex education (RSE) is learning about the emotional, social and physical aspects of growing up, relationships, sex, human sexuality and sexual health. It should equip children and young people with the information, skills and positive values to have safe, fulfilling relationships, to enjoy their sexuality and to take responsibility for their sexual health and well-being.

The statutory Government guidance ‘Relationships education, relationships and sex education (RSE) and health education’ (2019) sets out what pupils should know by the end of primary school and by the end of secondary school. It also emphasises that high quality teaching that is differentiated and personalised is key to accessibility of RSE for pupils with SEND.

When planning RSE for pupils with SEND it is important to work towards accessible provision of the content set out in the Government guidance, but it can also be helpful to think about four interconnected areas of learning:

- Personal care and hygiene
- Relationships and sex education
- Appropriate behaviour, including addressing sexualised behaviour
- Safeguarding

By placing these areas at the heart of your curriculum and reinforcing messages throughout the day, a wide range of educational and social benefits will be derived.

Q: When does RSE start for pupils with SEND?

As with all pupils, RSE for pupils with SEND should be part of life-long learning and begin at reception/school entry and continue throughout formal education and beyond. Start with core concepts such as public and private, using correct terms for private parts of the body, an understanding of rights relating to our bodies, rules relating to touch, positive friendships, respect and consent.

Appropriate RSE should be provided for pupils at all levels of development.

Q: What is the most effective model of delivery for RSE with pupils with SEND?

RSE is most effective when delivered through a whole school approach.

For pupils with SEND, this means working continuously through informal opportunities as well as the formal RSE curriculum. For example, when pupils are queuing for lunch there is an opportunity to reinforce learning about personal boundaries. All staff should be actively involved in offering consistent messages around RSE, e.g. teaching assistants, lunchtime supervisors, drivers, travel guides.

Pupils will learn from the way staff react in everyday situations and interactions such as those concerned with consent or privacy e.g. a matter of fact tone of voice and calm reaction to a situation can be helpful, for example where a pupil is touching or rubbing their own genitalia directly or through clothes in public. It is also helpful for the response from staff to be linked to RSE learning and school codes of behaviour.

Q: What is different about RSE for pupils with SEND?

In essence the curriculum and topics covered are similar to RSE with mainstream pupils however, the pace and detail of topics may be different and pupils may need lots of support to generalise their learning outside of RSE lessons and support to personalise the learning to their own relationships, behaviours and maturation. It may be appropriate to revisit topics more frequently with pupils with SEND to support ‘overlearning’ (i.e. practising and embedding the new skills, so the learner retains the learning beyond the initial success and develops mastery) for new and abstract topics.

Government guidance acknowledges that there may be a need for schools to tailor content and teaching to meet the specific needs of pupils at different developmental stages. The guidance also acknowledges the greater vulnerability to bullying, exploitation and other issues for pupils with SEND. For example, older pupils at an earlier level of development are more vulnerable and therefore have greater need to be informed and supported in RSE.

We recommend caution in omitting content, encouraging teachers of learners with SEND to differentiate teaching to developmental ability wherever possible, rather than limit the topics covered.

Q: What about RSE for pupils with SEND in mainstream education?

Pupils with SEND in mainstream schools may need additional support to make sense of RSE lessons, sometimes separate small group sessions or individual work can help, especially since aspects of their maturity may lag behind their peers. It may be appropriate to offer additional small group sessions for pupils with SEND which allow for questions and discussion that might be challenging or increase the risk of bullying in a usual class format.

Q: What about ‘High Functioning’ pupils with Autistic Spectrum Conditions?

Sometimes RSE needs for pupils with Autistic Spectrum Conditions in mainstream schools can be overlooked, their academic capabilities masking their social and emotional needs. Although they may understand the concrete information, work about relationships, consent and understanding risk and coercion can be very challenging for some young people on the spectrum. Individual sessions or small group provision in addition to mainstream classes can be beneficial to address this.

There is likely to be a higher incidence of 'social masking' and this should be taken in to consideration when evaluating the effectiveness of teaching and whether pupils have understood the nuances of social and appropriate intimate relationships.

Q: What about pupils with a physical disability?

Physical disability may impact on every aspect of an individual's life including how they socialise, develop relationships and have sex. Pupils with physical disability may have to find different ways to communicate, take part in learning and everyday activities: including making friends and socialising with others. They may have anxiety about a different body shape or image, worry about how their body works and what others may think. They may have additional worries or questions about puberty, how they can have sex and whether they can have children. They may not have the opportunity to talk about these things with others with similar needs.

It is important that these pupils have access to RSE alongside their peers as well as additional opportunities to explore questions that the RSE curriculum may raise for them. These conversations should take place in a safe space with a trusted and informed adult with access to appropriate, high quality information and resources specific to their needs and requirements. Sometimes it may be helpful if medical advice is sought by the family and shared as appropriate with the school to aid the planning and delivery of RSE with the consent of the young person.

Q: Is RSE relevant for pupils with Profound and Multiple Learning Disabilities (PMLD)?

Yes, pupils with PMLD have a right to good quality RSE that provides a curriculum differentiated to cater for their range of needs and abilities. The Encountering and Foundation stages of the PSHE Association Planning Framework for pupils with SEND offers a useful guide.

Whilst capacity to consent may be an issue for some pupils with PMLD it is important that their lived experience reflects good RSE principles. Consent may be experienced by a pupil with PMLD when a teacher leaves time following a request, for example saying and demonstrating 'I would like to move you in your wheelchair to your desk' and then waiting a moment when a pupil may indicate readiness before the teacher completes the action.

Privacy can be experienced by the pupil in how the teaching assistant supports individual personal care, they can narrate their actions e.g. 'I am closing the curtain to make this space private, I am helping you because I am your key worker, I am cleaning your vulva/penis in private' so topics such as public/private, accurate naming of body parts and safeguarding are all experienced by the pupil, contextualised and repeated daily.

Pupils with PMLD are exposed to greater incidences of personal touch and although they may not comprehend the difference it is our responsibility to ensure that we foster an environment of respect, safe routine and transparency when undertaking personal care routines – so that they can develop an understanding of appropriate practices.

Changes of behaviour during intimate routines can be an indicator of negative experiences.

Q. How can parents and carers be involved in RSE?

Working in partnership with parents and carers is a very important strand of effective RSE. Parents of pupils with SEND may face challenging issues at home that are relevant to RSE. Parents will appreciate information about what school is providing in RSE and may value opportunities for further discussion and support. Young people with additional needs say that they want more parental involvement in RSE so that they can continue their learning at home.

Working in partnership with parents also helps to achieve consistency across home and school and can contribute to parents positively supporting their child’s independence and successful journey to adulthood. Even a simple act of pupils making and taking home a private sign for a bathroom or bedroom may contribute to parents reflecting on their child’s need for privacy as they mature.

Parents’ meetings and EHC plan meetings are also a useful opportunity to recognise such shared needs and to prepare them and their children for puberty. Involving parents also enables greater understanding about families’ cultural and faith perspectives and their relevance to RSE.

Q: How do we differentiate RSE according to need?

A well-planned, age and stage-appropriate curriculum for RSE is essential. For some pupils with SEND, additional individual planning and focus may also be needed. This can be done using planning tools such as the PSHE Association Planning Framework for pupils with SEND.

Sometimes it is useful to think about maturity rather than chronological age, and also to factor in physical maturity which may be ahead of emotional or social maturity. It is important that all pupils are prepared for puberty, and this may require some individualised support and potentially some single gender work to learn about the more intimate aspects of personal hygiene and sexual development. It is important to ensure that RSE is appropriate to the pupils’ maturity, social understanding and interest in the subject, tailoring the delivery to support them to fully access the learning.

Q: How can we use RSE to tackle challenging sexualised behaviours?

The core concepts in RSE need to be embedded and reinforced from an early age. Pupils need to acquire knowledge of consent, appropriate touch, boundaries and public and private. Proactive RSE teaching can be a significant part of addressing a range of behaviour support needs e.g. respecting

---

What can teachers do in RSE lessons?

This easy read information was created by Richard Lawrence, a project support assistant at Mencap, based on his lived experience of having a learning disability. It reflects feedback and insight from a range of people with a learning disability and their supporters.

- Use accessible words
- Do not use jargon words or difficult phrases
- Do not use slang words
- Speak slowly and clearly
- Break information down
- Go at a slow pace
- Give breaks
- Keeping checking child’s understanding
- Give examples
- Give extra time
- Do not patronise
boundaries and privacy, public and private behaviours and places, alongside the usual behaviour management strategies to ensure the safety and dignity of pupils.

RSE is valuable in tackling an individual pupil's sexualised behaviour in school. For example discussion is necessary regarding sexual behaviours which would be inappropriate in school, but may be healthy and safe in the appropriate context, e.g. masturbation in the classroom versus in the learner's bedroom in private. Strategies can be shared with home to support parents and carers to help them deal with the issues that present at home and ensure a consistent response.

Q. How can we ensure RSE is inclusive for pupils with SEND?

Ensure all resources and images used are inclusive of all pupils e.g. including those in wheelchairs, or wearing hearing aids – as a general rule in both mainstream and SEND provision, not just when a pupil in a wheelchair is in the RSE class. This should be part of your general inclusive approach to RSE (and in other subjects and whole-school) and images should represent SEND, LGBT+, a range of ethnicities, and all the protected characteristics. Your choice of images and characterisation should reinforce the message that human sexuality is a positive thing and that no-one is excluded from that.

Materials should be available in appropriate learning media including tactile diagrams and physical materials when required.

Be aware of language used in RSE and ensure that it is inclusive, for example don’t talk about ‘jumping into bed’ which may be a confusing use of language for pupils on the autism spectrum and may exclude people with mobility issues. Again, reflect on inclusivity of language across the protected characteristics not just in terms of SEN and disability, e.g. using the phrase ‘most girls / boys’ rather than ‘all’ when describing puberty and body changes, to support LGBT+ inclusivity.

Follow up sessions may be used with smaller groups to personalise the learning from RSE group lessons. This may be targeted small group sessions, 1-1 as appropriate, or referrals to specific support staff.

The provisions of the Equalities Act mean that positive action can and should be taken, to address particular disadvantages affecting one group because of a protected characteristic. Government RSE guidance highlights that ‘some pupils are more vulnerable to exploitation, bullying and other issues due to the nature of their SEND’, and that ‘Relationships Education and RSE can also be particularly important subjects for some pupils; for example those with Social, Emotional and Mental Health needs or learning disabilities’.

TOP TIPS

The following practical tips can make a big contribution to RSE teaching with SEND pupils that is effective, safe and enjoyable for both pupils and staff.

Getting started: the whole-school approach

- Establish early partnership with parents/carers. These early partnerships are crucial in delivering consistent, clear messages to pupils and supporting family engagement with RSE.
- Identify and support a core group of committed staff who can deliver RSE, support each other and work together on individual needs and group programmes. Take time to work with staff around their values relating to RSE, including addressing any concerns about age appropriateness and differentiating for learners' needs and abilities.
- Agree your vocabulary as a school first. Once agreed within the staff group and governors and is established as a school policy this vocabulary can be communicated to everyone, consistently reinforced and explanations given when needed.
- Always use correct language for private body parts. If only learning one word, make it one widely used, acceptable and understandable to all. Remember that patterns and language that are first learned can remain for life. For example, if a family word is learned for referring to genitalia at home, some pupils may struggle to understand that there can be another word that is used in more formal circumstances. If a child does use a family word, it is important to give the proper name as well, to avoid any misunderstanding. This is important for safeguarding.
- Identify effective curriculum models for general delivery but also recognise that work often responds to an individual's needs, specifically focused and planned.
- Listen to children and young people – identify their needs and create a balance alongside understanding the perspectives of families.
Curriculum planning and taking the long view

- Recognise that RSE for pupils with SEND works by building layers of learning that are reinforced through repetition. When one fact or skill is learned, build this learning into next concept/topic and repeat the sequence again.
- Revisit the topics at different times and ages e.g. public and private, or consent for Year 1, 6, 9 and 11 or at their level of learning and find opportunities to keep practising the key skills.
- Look for opportunities to work on topics in parallel. E.g. public and private, body development and function, appropriate behaviour.
- Incorporate cross-curricular RSE messages into other subjects to support overlearning.
- Plan in repetition as pupils will need this and be happy to tell you or show what they know.

Have you considered?

Have RSE as a section on annual reviews with parents from the outset. Focus initially on personal care, then later on puberty, relationships and sexuality.

Teaching methods that work

- Value fun, engaging techniques that ensure RSE is memorable and can be recalled, these also help to lessen embarrassment.
- Use a range of resources; visual, tactile, audio, consider using real life props e.g. shavers, tampons, deodorant, clothes.
- Employ whole group activities such as Circle Time to create safe, welcoming spaces for every pupil to contribute and be heard.
- Use different techniques to reinforce one topic e.g. a game, a story, a picture, where possible use an ‘all channels’ approach; see it, hear it and do it.
- When answering questions, if you are not certain what the person is asking, seek clarification. The young person may be struggling with their understanding of social situations or wider concepts.
- Use simple and straightforward language, key words, phrases and concepts that are repeated regularly and used outside of lessons, ideally with a clear supporting visual cue.
- Have displays and resources up in school such as the ‘ask before you touch’ rule in class and displays about positive friendships around school.
- Seek advice from specialist SEND staff such as teacher of the deaf / multi-sensory or vision impaired, about inclusion and accessibility strategies too.

Approaches for dealing with RSE questions, issues or inappropriate behaviour

- Use a matter of fact approach and voice.
- Remain calm and do not become ‘jokey’.
- Be consistent e.g. in your use of language and key messages.
- Recognise the importance of being age appropriate.
- Find an appropriate, if necessary private, space to respond to a pupil.
- Focus on answering the question asked/raised.
- Clarify what the person is asking if that is not clear, and check that the learner feels that their question has been answered.

- Remind pupils they can discuss personal questions or tell you things after the lesson if that feels more appropriate
- Be clear about limits on confidentiality and respect pupil’s privacy
- You can take time to give an answer e.g. ‘Let me have a think about that and we’ll talk about it later’
- Try not to discuss the issue using yourself or a member of your family as an example. Use distancing techniques e.g. ‘This body change happens to most girls when they grow up’
- Discuss issues with colleagues if you need support. It’s OK to ask for help to deal with an RSE issue or behaviour and discussion with colleagues helps ensure consistent approaches
- Ensure your response is in line with the school RSE policy
- Be aware of the safeguarding policy and procedure if the issue raises such concerns

Supporting pupils with SEND in mainstream schools

The majority of pupils with SEND attend mainstream schools. They have a wide range of needs and teaching should be tailored to those needs. Much of the guidance above is relevant.

Here are some additional considerations for staff delivering RSE in mixed ability groups, particularly in mainstream.

Have you checked that:

- Inclusion and diversity are valued by the school and that this is clearly stated and visually apparent
- Resources include reference to and visual representation of pupils with additional needs
- All lessons use methods that are helpful for pupils with SEND, e.g. stories, drama and role play
- Resources are differentiated to cater for learners with additional needs
- Clear visual techniques are used in all lessons – these will benefit everyone

Acknowledgements

This ‘top tips’ guide was written by Lesley Kerr-Edwards and Sarah Duignan at Image in Action together with Rachael Baker and Lucy Emmerson at the Sex Education Forum, with Easy Read written by Richard Lawrence at Mencap.

Contributions also gratefully received from Shirley Wilson, RSE specialist for Deaf children and young people at NSPCC National Services; Di Caesar and Jane Carter, PDNET; Lindsey Rousseau, NatSIP; Martha Evans, Anti-Bullying Alliance; Philippa Stobbs and Chris Rees, Council for Disabled Children.

Further resources

- Sex Education Forum (2020) RSE resources list – SEND
- PSHE Association (2020) Planning Framework for pupils with SEND
- Image in Action
- Sex Education Forum training courses and webinars
- Mencap